After the fatal bullet had found a billet in the cheek of the Vicercy LI HUNG-CHANG, His Majesty the Minano, in token of a desire to make national amends for this injury, most magnanimously offered an unconditional armistice to China, an offer which was eagerly accepted. Nor was this all. In the subsequent negotiations the Japanese Plenipotentiary, displayed a consideration on the 23rd inst. that would hardly, we think, have been accorded to another Chinese Representative, and made concessions which will certainly adjourned until Thursday, 6th June. be regretted now by foreigners, and probably by Japanese in the future. To this demand the Chinese counter proposal was of course ludicrously inadequate. It simply ignored all the concessions demanded and proposed to place Japan on the same footing with regard to trade as other Treaty Powers, making the existing Treaties the basis for a new commercial treaty with

The case of Walker v. Bartlett (18 C. B. 845) expressly decides that at law he is liable, that there as an implied contract to indemnify the plaintiff as long as the defendant is the owner of the shares, or as long as he has allowed the plaintiff's name to remain upon the register." This pa-sage is valuable for the light which i throws upon the phrase "virtually owner of the shares" applied by Wightman, J., to the vendee in the ease of Walker v. Bartlett. The inference to my mind from this extract is that, as between the vendor and vendes of shares, the vendee stands to the vendor in the position of a virtual owner of the shares for what time he allows the vendor's name to remain on the register. If this inference is right, the decision in Walker v. Bartlett as interpreted by Lord Romilly corroborates the conclusion at which I have arrived independently of the cases. I shall not allude to any other cases cited at the bar.

If the wondor really clothed the vendes with such an authority. was a superfluous act and could not interfere with or be substituted for the absolute authority already vested in the vendee by the executed sale. It was further contended that there was not an absolute contract of sale to a specific of the one to claim and on the part of the other dispense with the liability to indemnify; but it was admitted that if there was a specific confuture calls subsisted. TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS." Sir,-I read Mr. Leigh's letter in your issue of to-day with some interest; and was glad to note that he, like yourself, agreed that a Commission should be appointed to nonsider the question of reconstruction or repair of the houses in the resumed area of Taipingshan. THE SUCCESSFUL BOYCOTT OF THE JAPANESE SUGAR DEALERS.

As already stated in these columns, the general goods merchants of Tokyo and Yokohama have decided, in order to abolish the system of commission, upon beyootting the Chinese merchants in Yokohama with whom they have hitherto had business transactions. From what the vermacular papers say, it now appears that a similar slep has been taken by the wholesale sugar merchants of the two cities, though in this instance not only against Chinese merchants but
